“The act of painting, to me, is an inspiration of itself. It is brought about by the experiences from travel and nature and music and every outside influence, but the act of painting holds a fascination all its own.

Painting is a continual journey, an eternal act of energy. Sometimes the creative process is finely controlled, sometimes it is frenetic and wildly abstracted. More times than not, it is a combination of both and a phenomenal experience.”

“The journey of one color vibrating through another and the balancing of light as more and more collage pieces are incorporated into my work makes the concept of the landscape richer, sometimes more complicated, sometimes freer, producing a sense of motion and a place for contemplation. The uncertainty is the adventure; there is a higher vision. Perhaps over the horizon line the vision becomes more clear. Sometimes it only leads to another quest, that not being the final journey. My landscapes challenge traditional boundaries and sometimes give us new ones. Not always referencing specific memories, sometimes incorporating visual shorthand, the collage elements evoke fragments and memories of a universal nature.”
